EICHMANN TRIAL IN JERUSALEM HEARS JEWISH DOOM WAS SEALED BY CONTINUOUS BLOODBATH; CONTRIVED CRUELTY; DEATH MARCHES; "HEALTH PARADES"; DEGRADATION; ENDLESS HIDING; CRUSHING LABOR; HIDEOUS STARVATION; DEHUMANIZATION

A barrage of documentary evidence was produced during his trial in the court of Jerusalem to counter Adolf Eichmann's contention that he had no power of decision over the life or death of European Jews.

The Israeli prosecution at the Eichmann trial submitted documents intended to prove that the former Gestapo (secret police) officer intervened personally to seal the doom of individual Jews attempting to escape the Nazi annihilation program during World War II, says the New York Times. Eichmann is facing a special court on charges that he played a major role in the annihilation of several million European Jews.

Among the items introduced in court was a letter to Eichmann from Eberhard von Thadden, Jewish affairs official in the German Foreign Ministry, warning that sanitary conditions at the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp were "completely inadequate."

Von Thadden wrote of his deep misgivings about Bergen-Belsen after a visit to the camp in 1943. He went there to look into arrangements for the planned transfer to Belsen of 30,000 Jews whom the Nazis hoped to "keep on ice" for later exchange for German citizens abroad. He was shocked to find that the camp could accommodate only 8,000, he said. He worried lest the "exchange Jews" would hear that 17,000 of the 18,000 Russian prisoners of war in the adjoining camp had perished.

This would give the Jews "material for stepping up atrocity propaganda abroad," Von Thadden told Eichmann.

He then recommended in his letter that the camp for Soviet prisoners be immediately disbanded and that the proposed Jewish camp be extended to cover the whole area.

No evidence was submitted regarding Eichmann's reaction to this letter. Apparently he continued to send Dutch, Belgian and Norwegian Jews to Bergen-Belsen in numbers far beyond the camp's capacity. Countless Jews died there in a typhus epidemic, among them Anne Frank, the schoolgirl diarist from Amsterdam, says the New York Times. British troops found 13,000 unburied corpses in the camp when they liberated Belsen in April, 1945.

Von Thadden is one of several former Nazi officials whose affidavits for the Nuremberg war crimes trials have been admitted in the case against Eichmann. Eichmann's counsel, Dr. Robert Servatius, demanded that Von Thadden be brought to Israel, but the court ruled this impracticable because of a threat by the Israeli Attorney General, Gideon Hausner, to arrest him. The court then requested West Germany to examine Von Thadden.

Another document presented was a record of a meeting in Duesseldorf of Eichmann and his Gestapo aides. This was described as "rare" because the Gestapo files were later destroyed.

At this meeting, on March 6, 1942, Eichmann remarked that some German police officials were irritated because elderly Jews were still to be seen in the ghettos after the rest of the Jews had been deported to Poland. To remove the temptation of police authorities to "get rid of troublesome old Jews," Eichmann said he was in a position to reveal that the Reich was about to set up a special concentration camp for elderly Jews at Theresienstadt, near Prague, the document said.

Eichmann went on to explain that the Theresienstadt camp was designed "to save face abroad." The prosecution offered other documents to show that Eichmann had been ruthless in tracking down individual Jews seeking to elude his deadly implementation of the "final solution" of the Jewish problem.

Dealing with a Jew named Hirschberg, who was working for Thailand's Minister to Berlin as a language teacher, Eichmann complained to the Foreign Ministry: "The Minister is employing the Jew Hirschberg only to protect him from anticipated events," says the New York Times. He asked the Foreign Ministry to see that the Thai Minister discontinued Hirschberg's employment.

In another letter, Eichmann rejected a request by Von Thadden for an exit permit for a Dutch Jewish family bound for Swedon. "In accordance with the Fuehrer's orders, exit permits to Jews are being granted only when there is a Reich interest involved," Eichmann replied.

He intervened also to prevent the flight of a Viennese painter, Emil Fleischmann, who had applied for a position with the Afghanistan Ministry of Culture with the intent of emigrating to Kabul.

Another Viennese Jew, a physician named Kollman, also was seeking emigration to Kabul. Eichmann wrote to the Foreign Ministry: "I have ordered the two professors included on one of the first deportation trains to the East. With this we may presume that the case is settled."

A letter from Eichmann to the Duesseldorf secret police headquarters, with instructions on the acquisition of Jewish art treasures, was also among the documents submitted by the prosecution. The letter told a Duesseldorf Gestapo officer, Dr. Wentuer, that Jewish art treasures in the area should be acquired by purchase or at auctions. In his interrogation by the Israeli police before the trial, Eichmann explained that this order originated with Reichsmarshal Hermann Goering, who had a taste for art.

Another document showed that Eichmann had been concerned with having a Jewish institution turned over to the Lebensborn, an institution run by the S. S. (elite guard) where illegitimate children of S. S. men were brought up.

Instructions issued in 1942 by the Jewish affairs department of the Gestapo, which Eichmann headed, ordered "the most severe measures" by Gestapo agents against German, Austrian, and Czechoslovak Jews who tried to foil Nazi attempts to confiscate their properties before they were deported to the East, says the New York Times. Other instructions showed that deported Jews had to pay their own rail fares.

Instructions for the deportation of Jews from Wuerzburg, Bavaria, said they could keep their wedding rings, a watch, and their identity cards. But "even these articles were taken away at the last moment," according to the assistant prosecutor, Yaacov Baror.

He said local authorities were told to inform the deported persons that their property was confiscated because they were "enemies of the Reich" and would be deprived of citizenship on leaving German territory. Even the Iron Cross, Germany's highest decoration, was taken from one deportee, Mr. Baror said.

Other evidence showed that the legal expert in Eichmann's office had directed that the property of a Jew designated for deportation who died before leaving German territory was also to be confiscated.

Witnesses have not only described the endless pulling of triggers that went on around them in what became for the Jews a continuous bloodbath all around the country, says the New York Herald Tribune, but the most forceful point the testimony has made was the contrived, calculated, and methodical cruelty practiced on the victims, along with the most ingenious forms of degradation.

Death marches; health parades in which victims were selected for extermination; the dashing of babies' heads against concrete; and the shooting of infants in the mothers' arms and then mothers themselves; the waiting in camps naked for hours and sometimes days exposed to the rigors of weather; the endless hiding: the treks across the country with the bones exposed from lacerated feet; the constant starvation and crushing labor; all were recited as in a litany of suffering.

At one point Attorney General Gideon Hausner asked a magistrate of Tel Aviv why he and his fellow victims did not revolt and attack the guards. This is a question many native-born Israeli youngsters have difficulty in understanding. The witness replied there was not one answer but many answers to the question, and he made an eloquent effort to give them.

A thirty-six-year-old Polish-born American scientist, of Fort Lee, N. J., gave horrifying testimony. Dr. Leon Willickzer Wells, an executive of the ARC Projection Co. of New York, and a research authority in optics and mechanical engineering, told how he escaped alive from a mass grave in which the intended victims first had to throw a layer of dirt over those who had just been shot and then waited in turn to be shot themselves and stacked in the grave by those who followed them.

Dr. Wells, a fine - looking young man who lives with his Austrian - born wife, a four-year-old daughter and two-and-a half-year-old-son at 3051 Edwin Avenue, Fort Lee, was sixteen years old when he underwent the experience in the Nazi Janowska death camp outside Lwow, Poland, in 1941, says the New York Herald Tribune. He had already survived other experiences with mass murder by Nazi execution squads, and he had just recovered consciousness from pneumonia when he was marched to the mass grave, he testified.

He escaped through the circumstance of being summoned from the grave as he awaited death. He was ordered to return to the main part of the camp and haul out the corpse of a man who had just been shot there and bring it to the mass grave.

He was returning to the grave pit, where the still warm and bleeding bodies were stacked neatly in criss-crossed layers each covered with a little sand, when he saw his opportunity. He told how he suddenly dropped the corpse he was dragging and melted into a group of other prisoners and then got back to his barracks and hid under a bunk.

His gruesome story was given in the English language. He told the New York Herald Tribune after court that he had four more separate escapes from burial pits afterwards.

Dr. Wells went to America in 1949 on a government student grant and got his doctorate from Lehigh University in applied mathematics.

An almost unrelieved recital of atrocity experiences was given by survivors of the Nazi terror in Poland. These were Jews who lived through the years when the special commando squads of the SS (Nazi Elite Guard) were ravaging that country, at first exterminating Jews by bullets and later shipping them off by the thousands to slave labor and gas extermination camps.

The blood and brutality described in eye-witness detail by these survivors imposed a severe strain on all courtroom listeners and kept some people in tears.

Dr. Wells was the second oldest child of his family. He had two brothers and four sisters, but none survived the terror. His trouble began in 1941 when the Germans occupied Lwow and he was arrested.

He described one experience where Jewish men and youths were rounded up and made to lie face down in a sand lot through the night while SS guards shot and clubbed their way around the suffering victims, says the New York Herald Tribune. At sunrise, he testified, he could see dozens of men dead, many with their brains oozing from their broken skulls.

He told about life in a slave-labor camp where the prisoners were forced to work on a calculated extermination schedule; and of the onset of typhus and other epidemics. He related how he came down with pneumonia and was for a time unconscious.

Telling about his march to the mass grave, he testified:

"We were told to line up to march. Two hours before I was unconscious, but now I was marching. Fifty feet farther along a burial group joined our group, and we knew we were marching in the direction to be buried. When we got to the scene we found no grave prepared for us. We had to [illegible], and they registered every name to be sure nobody escaped. Then everybody got a shovel and we started to dig our own grave.

"When the grave was finished they started to read the names. Two of us at a time had to walk down into the grave and lie face down and be shot. The next two had to cover with a little sand the first two, and then they were shot. And so it went. My dream at this time as I was standing there was to get something to drink — to drink my own blood, because my high fever was making me unbearably thirsty.

"When I came up on the list of names, I started to walk down into the grave. Then I was told to come back up and go with an SS man back to the camp. The reason was a man had been shot at the camp and they wanted me to bring over his body so they could bury him now."

"I got my pants back, but no shoes and nothing else. I took the shot body from the camp and in the heat of the day I could walk only slowly, pulling the body. The SS man was not counting on my reaction. He was walking a few steps ahead of me. Up ahead was a bigger group. I dropped the body and disappeared among those people. It seems that he, the SS man, was thinking that if he lost me he was afraid of his superior too," says the New York Herald Tribune. In any case, the witness was clear that if any one made a move there would have been trouble with the guards. "I can't describe the fear. This was a terror. There was no possibility of reacting. There was the belief that the war would end one day. And even if we made an attempt, where to? Where could a Jew run to?"

One of this witness' most chilling experiences was when the execution squads turned machine guns on women and children while the loudspeakers on the camp parade grounds played lullabies.

A man named Hirsch Pachter told of a march of Jews from the Polish town of Rubishow in December, 1939. He described how SS men assembled the male Jews in the market place and began a long trek to the east, with SS soldiers shooting down the stragglers along the entire line of march.

He told of a straggling father being taken out of the column to be shot and of the man's son leaping to save his father. The witness quoted the son, "Take me," and the SS men said, "You come along, too." The witness said the soldiers took both father and son.

"They were shot in the back of their heads, and the bullets came out of their foreheads," he said. The witness testified that the guards kept changing shifts and they asked each other, "How many did you get?" and the answers were: "Eighty-nine, 100, 102."

"There was Moishe Moskal," the witness testified, "whose foot was torn completely and the flesh and bone protruded because he and the others were afraid to stop and take their shoes lest they be shot."

Mr. Pachter told how when they were near the Russian border the Jews were told that for five marks they could get a paper allowing them to cross the river into Russia, says the New York Herald Tribune. He said, "Hundreds of people went and bought these little pieces of paper, and then hundreds of them marched in the direction of Bedinko. There they were surrounded and beaten to the point where blood ran."

The witness testified that he himself eventually did cross into Russia and he stayed there until the end of the war.

Jacob Gurfein, of Tel Aviv, said he was living in the town of Sanok, in Galicia, when the war broke out and the Jews were concentrated in a ghetto-like enclave or camp surrounded by barbed wire called Zasiav. Months later, he said, about 10,000 of these Jews were put aboard railroad cars while some 500 who failed to appear for the transport were rounded up and shot. He said:

"My uncle went to the Gestapo officer and promised him money to relieve him and his family. They took him together with the other people to a big pit and shot the 500 people, then he was kicked and told to run away. He returned to our camp. He was covered with blood from head to foot."

On the railroad transport, he said, he was put aboard a train with 1300 other Jews. When the train began to travel, the big question among those on board was whether it would turn at a certain junction toward the right, in which direction lay an extermination camp, or toward the left, which would have meant a labor camp.

CREDITS . . .

As soon as most TV shows end, most of you dash off to the kitchen — or somewhere else! We think this is a pity, personally, because if you waited you would see our name on your TV screen.

We're responsible for the musical arrangements on "Country Hoedown" and "Club 6", and last summer we did the same job on "While We're Young". Since we like publicity, we're sorry you miss it in the rush to put the coffee percolator on the boil.

But apart from television work, we are available for all kinds of events within the community. We've got the best musicians and singers available. Why not call us?

The marriage of Miss Shirley Anne Ross, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Ross, 560 Deloraine Avenue, to Harvey Haber, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Haber, 104 Ridge Hill Drive, was solemnized at six o'clock, on Tuesday, June 6, at Beth Sholom Synagogue. Rabbi David Monson officiated, assisted by Rabbi Bernard Rosenaweig, and Cantor Henry Wahrman. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white silk organza, with fitted bodice; scooped neckline; bouffant skirt, with bustle back; and appliques of leaves and flowers. Her fingertip illusion veil was combined with a crown made of the same material as her gown; and she carried white roses and stephanotis, centered with an orchid. Mrs. Arthur Rothbart, sister of the groom, was matron of honour. She wore a shocking-pink, peau de soie gown, with bell-shaped skirt; also a headdress of a pink cabbage rose, with veiling; and had a bouquet of pink and white, feathered carnations. The bridesmaids were: Mrs. Henry Ross, sister-in-law of the bride; and Miss Pearlena Wilson, of Detroit, Mich., cousin of the bride. Each wore a gown of pink silk organza, over peau de soie, with fitted bodice; and draped skirt. Each had identical headdress and bouquet as that of the matron of honour. Wendy Rothbart, niece of the groom, and Diana Sernick, niece of the bride, were junior bridesmaids. Each wore a gown of pink organza, with full skirt; and a headdress which was a smaller replica of the bridesmaids'; and carried a nosegay of pink and white feathered carnations. Dr. Henry Ross, brother of the bride, was best man. The ushers were: Alan Stephen Ross, brother of the bride; Seymour, and Nathan Haber, cousins of the groom; Harvey Fromkin, Howard Lesser, Larry Band, Marvin Schrieder, and Moe Hornfeld. A dinner and reception was held at the Synagogue, with three hundred and fifty guests present. Mrs. Ross, mother of the bride, wore a gown of mauve-pink lace over peau de soie; and a floral hat in shades to match it; and had a mauve orchid corsage. Mrs. Haber, mother of the groom, wore a pink peau de soie gown, with soft pleats at front and back; and headdress to match it, trimmed with beading; with a mauve orchid corsage. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Haber went to the Nevele Hotel, in the Catskill Mountains, and New York, to spend their honeymoon, travelling by motor. They will reside at 3159 Bathurst Street. Here for the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. Joey Ross, of North Miami Beach, Florida, uncle and aunt of the bride; Mrs. Rose Ritter, great-aunt of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Wilson, and Michael; and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wilson; cousins of the bride; all of Detroit, Mich.; Sidney Forman, uncle of the bride, and daughter, Joan, of Ottawa, Ont.; Mrs. Max Newman, of Brooklyn, N.Y., aunt of the groom; and Dr. and Mrs. Israel Harnick, of Buffalo, N.Y.

The Thirteenth Anniversary Of The Founding Of The State Of Israel

Address delivered in Montreal at the Israel Bond Drive dinner

BY THE HONOURABLE LESTER B. PEARSON

I am deeply moved by the warmth of the reception I have received from this great assembly. I am equally moved by the generous and friendly introduction I have received from one who has earned the respect of all Canadians, Mr. Sam Bronfman, a man who has never hesitated to back any good cause in the finest traditions of the best citizenship. Perhaps he will permit me, even though I am a bit late, to offer him my most sincere congratulations on having reached seventy years of achievement and service, from which both Canada and Israel, and, may I add, the United States have all benefited.

I am not unaware that this year marks the tenth anniversary of the Israel Bond Sales program. For it was in 1951 that the Independence Issue first was created as a matter of Israeli Foreign borrowing policy. I am told that since that day 470 millions of dollars of bonds of the State of Israel have been sold to Jews and non-Jews in many parts of the world; and over $31,000,000 in Canada alone or almost seven percent of the total. When this effort is viewed as something over and above the "gift-dollar" program to which most members of Jewish communities everywhere subscribe, the grand record of "diaspora" support for the people of Israel is remarkable indeed.

I realize the importance of these various programs, including this bond program, for Israeli economic development, as well as for helping Israel meet her difficult balance of payments problems. Such payments problems are not unique to the people of Israel. The richest nation in the world, the United States, has been suffering from a difficult balance of payments situation in recent years. In Canada we face it chronically. Why should we expect Israel, moving, in less than a generation, from a broken mandate to a free state, "ingathering its exiles", to be in any less need of the overseas help that all new countries require as they establish themselves in the stream of modern economic development.

The citizens of Israel, by their own heroic efforts and with this help they have received, have brought about an economic, social, and cultural development that has made that small state a symbol of dynamic, stable democracy on the edge of the restless middle eastern world. In all of this progress the millions of dollars of bond sales are a central part. Pipelines and railways, industrial development and the opening of new areas for settlement, canals and harbours; the development of the Yarmuk and the Jordan, to help irrigate the Negev; all of these staples of economic development are the fruits of the bond conception and its vigorous execution in a decade of vigorous achievement.

This is another, and even more important, anniversary year. The State of Israel is celebrating its thirteenth birthday.

On this birthday a Hebrew boy celebrates his most significant and most meaningful anniversary. On this day he becomes "Bar-Mitzvah"; confirmed. He acquires maturity in his status as a member of the Jewish people, with all the traditional ceremonials at the Synagogue by which he is inducted and assumes full responsibility for all his acts to God and to man.

1961 will be known, no doubt, as Israel's "Bar-Mitzvah" Year. It is being confirmed. It has grown to maturity. It has proven that it is able to assume its full responsibility towards all mankind, as a member of the family of nations.

In Israel, Judaism has once again become a nation as well as a race, a religion, a culture; a mother country, in the full political, as well as in the sentimental sense of the word. This has been a development of far-reaching historical importance and I was privileged to watch and participate in some of the international diplomatic negotiations at the United Nations leading up to it fourteen years ago.

I shall never forget those days of high, if unfinished, drama, of tragedy too, when the Israel of today was born out of the force employed by those who fought against any kind of birth; even that of a small Jewish state in Palestine alongside an Arab Palestine state; and with a special regime for Jerusalem, that city of holiness and history for all Jews and Christians and Muslems; that symbol of peace, Eer Sholom, which is now so tragically divided by barbed wire, and, even more, by fear and hostility.

In spite of all, Israel, surrounded by unfriendly and apprehensive neighbours, who will not admit her right to peaceful or, indeed, to any form of national existence; Israel exists. Her people, gathered together from all parts of a turbulent world and from the dark past of persecution and suffering, live and work and achieve, in a free society of their own choice. They have shown what democracy, combined with devotion, and determination, can do in a land not flowing in milk and honey; with not much living space, with troubled borders and hostile neighbours. The dedicated people of Israel have brought new meaning to pioneering. Through their efforts the hard past has been converted into a present of high adventure.

Because of the achievements of a free Israel, Jews who remain in other lands can hold their heads higher. To those lands, their Jewish citizens give not less, but a fuller loyalty and service; something that was not possible, and which there was no right to claim, in the bad days of old when they were rejected as full citizens. The existence of a separate, independent, State of Israel raises no contradiction between a Jewish citizen's full loyalty to his own country and his deep feeling for Israel. The Scots and the Irish, and others, have that dual emotional pull, too; and no conflict arises, except perhaps on St. Patrick's or St. Andrew's Day!

It was more than 2,400 years ago when the Jews first lost their separate political identity in the Middle East, when they were deported to the "concentration camps" by the Assyrian and Babylonian Imperialists.

In the seemingly endless diaspora (dispersion) that resulted, they never lost faith in Zion's destiny. Without a state of their own, despised often in the states in which they lived, they tenaciously clung to their own identity as a community. They never gave up. Theirs was a rare and wonderful demonstration of the indestructibility of the soul and of the heart The result is Israel in 1961.

The dual task of reclaiming a land-placed as Israel is today, and of restoring a dispersed people to normal national living, involves both economic and human problems of such extreme difficulty that responsibility for dealing with the issues concerned could hardly have been assumed by present-day Jewish leaders were it not for the intensity of the Jewish feeling of revolt against cruelty and discrimination suffered in Europe since medieval times and brought to an awful climax in Nazi rule. That revolt was also the expression of a stubborn hope, of an inflexible determination to survive which has typified Jewish life and inspired Jewish legend. The same qualities serve Israel well now. And they are needed.

Israel is a small area, no larger than Lake Erie, which the Jewish people are now seeking to use as the geographical territory within which their national survival shall be assured. Nor is the present population of Israel large. As a result of mass immigration in the past four years, the total has now reached approximately the level it had attained before the Arab exodus, but even now, after these four years of heroic rescue work, it is not much larger than the population of greater Montreal.

The stature of a land, however, is not measured by a surveyor's instrument, nor the greatness of a nation by the census-taker. Israel's future rests on many things which mere statistics cannot show. This land now represents for a gifted, but scattered and often frustrated, people the possibility of realising the twin principles of self-liberation and self-help which were advocated in the last century by Leon Pinsker and others, as the only adequate answer to anti-Semitism.

That great Jewish sociologist, the late Dr. Arthur Ruppin, to whose courageous work as one of the builders of Israel Dr. Weizmann has paid special tribute, stated in his book, "The Jews in the Modern World", that the original source of anti-Semitism is the group instinct, which, like the herd instinct of animals, welds men connected by common descent, language, customs, and interests into a cohesive community while it causes them at the same time to distrust members of other groups.

When the Jews first migrated to Europe, he went on to say, they were admitted only as outsiders and long remained strangers by reason of differences of race, religion, culture, occupation. They had to make their way as representatives of one of the ancient eastern civilizations in the midst of a more primitive western culture. So anti-Semitism had its rise then in Europe as part of the general fear of, and prejudice against, strangers which permeated ancient and medieval society and still lingers on today in one form or another.

Civilized man, however, has learned, even though he often refuses to act on the knowledge, a good deal more today than was known a thousand years, or even a hundred years ago, about the deep and secret springs of human prejudice and fear; and about the most effective means of securing release from that fear, either for groups or for individuals. So there are factors which give some hope that the initial struggle to secure the establishment of a Jewish state, and the fears and the tensions which have inevitably accompanied that struggle, are not to be a permanent feature of the environment in which Israel finds itself.

An honest recognition and a searching analysis of such fears, which beset human beings in various stages of their development, is essential as a means of reducing and removing them.

There is one deep-seated fear held by her Arab neighbours that has caused Israel much harm and even now threatens her development; that the new Jewish state might adopt a policy of both territorial and economic expansion at Arab expense.

I do not myself think that the territory, preferred above all others by the Jewish people for the purpose of national regeneration and development, will necessarily prove to be inadequate for that purpose. Even in the past, without the aid of modern scientific progress, the same land has supported a relatively large population in comfort, and we are assured by scientists and agronomists that it can do so again without threat to the territorial integrity or the economic and cultural self-determination of neighbouring peoples.

This should remove any legitimate anxiety of Israel's neighbours; whose rights, of course, as well as fears, are recognized. Moreover, those principles of self-help and self-liberation which are valid for Jews who have endured persecution in Europe for centuries, but who come back to the Eastern Mediterranean bringing with them the skills and the outlook of the West, these same principles are valid also for the Arabs who have long endured other forms of oppression since their great civilization fell into decline at the time of the Mongol invasions and who, today, suffer many consequent disabilities from which it is now their obvious determination to escape.

In the secure international society that we are all struggling, against heavy odds and obstacles, to create, there must be recognition of the intensity of the desire of all peoples to develop along lines of their own choosing. There must also be a corresponding recognition of the need for mutual understanding and of the inescapable requirements of interdependence.

Looking back over the thirteen years of Israel's often harassed existence, it is clear that the main characteristics of her problems as defined at the beginning of her life have continued to dominate the present and influence the future. Central to all, of course, is this sad truth that Israel's birth was accompanied by deep Arab resentment and resistance, and that this resentment, exacerbated by the unsolved refugee problem, hovers like a threatening shadow ever over the affairs of the whole region.

What a tragedy it was that somehow in those formative days the moderate leadership on the Arab side could not have seen its way clear to accepting the reality and the value for the Middle East of a free, progressive, and pacific Jewish State. What a tragedy also it was that the intervention of the United Nations in the Suez crisis of 1956 was not carried further to bring about some political solution to the problems of the area.

I have tried myself, over the years, to be as objective as I can be, and as I should be, about these matters. But I must confess to a feeling of frustration and sadness at the inability of Arab opinion to accept Israel as a full, living, and lasting community in the society of nations, helping to form a bridge between the West and the Arab world. I know that the refugee problem in particular tends to delay and frustrate any such acceptance and long-range settlement.

But somewhere, somehow, as political settlements begin to emerge on the other great issues of our time, as I hope they will, as indeed they must, on Berlin, East Germany, on Formosa, South East Asia, and now Africa and the Congo, the refugee question and the general relations of Israel to her neighbours also must find an appropriate answer. Men and nations of good will everywhere will hope and work for that day. But in the meantime, they must not stand idly by and see Israel menaced while it rightfully seeks the good life for its people and peace with its neighbours. This has been Canadian policy in the past. I see no reason why it should not be Canadian policy for the future.

While we think of the future of Israel, we are all conscious, I know, of the fact that as we meet here in this free land, where a single murder is a black headline, there is a trial taking place in Jerusalem that has gripped the attention of the world. This trial recalls a terrible and traumatic episode; one that the mind cannot absorb in all its horror. It is a grim reminder of one of the lowest points reached in the dismal record of man's inhumanity to man.

There may be differences of opinion about the methods used to bring Adolf Eichmann to trial. There may even be arguments over the desirability of a long, drawn-out trial at all, reviving, as it is bound to do, the horrible memories of a horrible time. But there can be no argument over the fact that this trial is being conducted in the finest traditions of the rule of law and will result in even-handed justice being dispensed.

It is heartening to see a people who have so often been the victims of lawlessness acting with such strict adherence to law in the conduct of this trial. Yet this is as it should be, for those who have been the victims of lawlessness, of prejudice, or discrimination, should be the last to practice those vices. Yet, in history, it is not always so. The unfree colonial who achieves power and authority has been known to become the intolerant imperialist. The minority, when it becomes a majority, can sometimes forget the lessons of its own experience.

Nazis have perished in the ruins of their own creation, but totalitarian tyranny remains. We are far from the day when compassion and conviction are the foundation of all authority and when each man is his fellow's brother.

This trial, I hope, will help to tear away forever the notion that man can ever be entrusted with absolute power over his fellow; that there can ever be a "master" race, a "higher" nationality, an "exclusive" culture; that any actions can be condoned in the name of an historical mission when they mean the destruction of lives and the debasement of values.

Perhaps the Eichmann case, in some ironic way, may serve a great human and political purpose in pointing up these truths. Perhaps it can become one more element in laying the foundation and creating the concepts of world decency and of world law, where man shall not be able to hide behind the facade of the state for the crimes that they commit. Perhaps it will ensure that such crimes become so abhorrent to our ways of thought and living that they will pass into history as a foul memory while a new course for man's behaviour is followed by generations to come.

The lawyers may worry about the niceties of jurisdiction, about the legal character of the offences committed before Israel was born and at a place where she does not dwell. We must understand and respect the concern of those who not only wish to see justice done but wish to make sure that "it seems to be done". Perhaps there is an answer to such concern in the view that the laws of Israel and the exercise of her jurisdiction in this case merely declare. In any event, let us pray that mankind never again shall suffer a review of its soul, so profoundly chilling but so meaningful as that which is taking place in Jerusalem today.

As the awful story of this trial unfolds, it will be very, very hard for many to keep a sense of perspective. Yet, even those most emotionally involved, will, I'm sure, realize that, while the past, and its emotions, cannot be forgotten, yet they should not be permitted to make even more difficult the problems of the present.

That towering figure of the State of Israel, David Ben Gurion, had this to say on March 31, last:

"We must beware of any kind of race theory. There is no doubt that before the Nazis there existed a different kind of Germany, and there is a different Germany now, after the Nazis. Everybody bears responsibility for what he himself does. We do not want to make the children responsible for the sins of the fathers."

These are wise words. They mean that we must face and overcome the challenges of the future while not forgetting the lessons of the past and that, in doing so, as Ben Gurion says, each man has his own responsibility.

Four days ago, a man broke the bonds that have kept him on this little, crowded, restless planet. For the first time he has travelled into outer space. He has ventured so far, when, on earth itself, he is unable to rise above the clinging fog of suspicion and fear and enmity that envelops and may destroy his planet. What a contrast there is between man's physical genius and his spiritual and social primitiveness. He can send a missile into infinity and get signals from it twenty-five million miles away, but he cannot communicate friendship and co-operation across a curtain.

The awful consequence of this failure is written in letters of blood in the story of our century. Our supreme task is to change the story before it ends in universal tragedy. The essence of this task is to find ways of diminishing the force of fear and hatred in the world. Another part of it is to assert and protect the right of civilized human beings to live freely and peacefully in their own environment, remembering that those whose history and traditions differ from our own have an equal right to develop along lines which they consider to be right for their own needs.

There are many other things that must be done. Progress throughout the world, both in the development of national life and in the sphere of international co-operation, must be protected against possible attacks from the new totalitarian aggression. We, the free, must be strong and confident in our strength. We must not become the captives of our fears or the victims of our illusions.

All men, or nearly all men, long for peace, on their terms. But all men do not support policies that make for peace. Every civilized man will condemn prejudice and intolerance but some who claim to be civilized will accept practices that make for intolerance and discrimination. No man has the right to praise brotherhood and equality, as long as he does not fight against racial, or religious, or social, or economic discrimination of any form or kind in any place or clime.

We, in Canada, have no cause to be smug or superior, in the progress we have made to the realization of these ideals. If we had faced conditions that other peoples have had to face, our record might not be as good as it is. Indeed, the relatively happy circumstances of our community and national life should not make us complacent, but all the more determined to root out every lingering manifestation of the disease of intolerance and discrimination wherever and whenever it appears in our country.

There are moments, in this time of hydrogen and hate, in a world where man has conquered nearly everything but himself, when one is tempted to despair of the future. Yet it would be folly to take refuge from our fears in defeatism. It is tempting for "the embittered idealist, in terror of further disillusionment, to retreat from life to rock in the cradle of each passing sensation". It is a temptation which should be rejected by governments and by peoples.

Man, faced with the sad memories, and the grim consequences, of his failure to live peaceably with other men, has many times accepted as inevitable a doom that he has somehow managed to escape. We must do our best to make it so this time also; because now the penalty for failure may be annihilation.

So we must work and fight for peace, freedom, and decency in the world. The courage and resolution of the children of Israel in the thirteen new years of this old nation should give us all heart and hope. Their achievements have truly been the enshrinement of the Biblical clarion call: "For from Zion shall go forth the law and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

Sholom Uvracha.
